The present invention relates to a fish lure, which is a "spin-cast fishing lure with a tail" that is designed for use in a variety of rivers, lakes, and seas to entice a fish to strike a hook at the end of the lure. In particular, the present invention relates to an improved fish lure that is structured so that it is easy to use and cast. Various types of fish lures are known in the art. Some are cast and others are pulled through the water. Fish lures are used in a variety of situations. For example, bait fish can be made into a lure with a hook, enticed with a scent, or attached to a weighted line. The fish lure used in the present invention can be cast using any suitable technique. U.S. Pat. No. 3,840,340, to Foage, discloses a spin-cast lure including a body, a tail including a rear flipper, a base, and a stem. The body has a central axis extending from a first end to a second end. The body includes a concave surface substantially extending from the first end to the second end.
