Aristo continues to be the most impressive license-free product we have ever seen. Its split into two parts, the installer and the active component, with three options for activating (purchased, search the web or the product itself). The first time the program is run, a small file is installed into Application Data and the second, larger file is placed in Temporary Internet Files. What is included in these two folders is utterly bewildering, but largely harmless (plus a few files to cover the main three options). The second component, during active execution, seems to mainly be checking for registry changes, which is certainly a useful feature, but nonetheless is not quite solid enough to be called 'anti-spyware'. However, in the performance tests Aristo's own detection record consistently outstripped the rest of the field, with a result of 73.47% on average, with 64.29% from the F-Prot tests. We were pretty impressed. Although as usual focused on the desktop market, Webroot SecureAnywhere Free continues to be a popular license-free product that one can use for free. However, keep in mind that this is not a completely 'freeware' product. Despite the name, the solution can actually only be downloaded and deployed using a Free-To-Use product which has a limited number of goals, mainly having to do with diagnosis (like an Inspector). We have seen no reason to doubt that this product has excellent detection, and it has proved good at the F-Prot anti-malware tests, with an average of 46.49% detection. Its the choice of a Free-To-Use product, and the resulting potential liability, which generally causes the reviled webroot to be used with caution by reviewers.
