In most countries, the majority of people will die with the MMR in their family history. The United Kingdom and Ireland have moved on (pun intended) from the MMR vaccine controversy, so the population average in these areas is likely to be 1.7. Some other countries have little data, but all the data that does exist is consistent with the numbers above. 11.6% of people in the United States will have a family history of autism, according to an analysis by the American Academy of Pediatrics. Today the mortality rate from measles was a startling 36.9 per 100,000. And the rate of morbidity from the measles vaccine was 1.7 per 100,000. Note that the three countries with the highest mortality rates from measles are all countries with the worst MMR vaccination rates.
